The story goes that on Christmas Eve, many years ago, a group of children were playing on the frozen lake in the village of Schaan. Suddenly, the ice cracked and the children fell into the icy water.

The children were all frightened and started to cry. But then, a miracle happened. A group of fish swam up to the children and helped them to stay afloat.

The fish swam with the children all the way to the shore, where they were met by their parents. The parents were overjoyed to see their children alive and well, and they thanked the fish for their help.

The story of the fish out of water children is a reminder that even in the darkest of times, there is always hope. It is a story of courage, kindness, and the power of miracles.

The Origins of the Story

The story of the fish out of water children is thought to have originated in the 17th century. The first written account of the story appeared in a book called "The History of Liechtenstein" by Johann Baptist Büchel in 1643.

Büchel's account of the story is very similar to the version that is still told today. He wrote that on Christmas Eve, 1614, a group of children were playing on the frozen lake in Schaan when the ice cracked and they fell into the water.

Büchel wrote that the children were all frightened and started to cry. But then, a group of fish swam up to the children and helped them to stay afloat. The fish swam with the children all the way to the shore, where they were met by their parents.

Büchel's account of the story ends with the children and their parents thanking the fish for their help. He also wrote that the fish were never seen again.

The Meaning of the Story
