Early Life and Training

Massetti was born in Cremona, Italy, in 1754. His father, Lorenzo Massetti, was a cabinetmaker, and his mother, Margherita Capra, was a musician. Massetti's early exposure to music and woodworking influenced his decision to become a violin maker.

At the age of 14, Massetti apprenticed with Carlo Bergonzi, one of the most famous violin makers of the time. Massetti's talent and dedication quickly became evident, and he soon became one of Bergonzi's most promising students.

Master Craftsman

After completing his apprenticeship with Bergonzi, Massetti established his own workshop in Milan, Italy. He quickly gained a reputation for his meticulous craftsmanship and the exceptional sound of his violins.

Masetti's violins are known for their beautiful proportions, elegant lines, and rich, warm tone. He used high-quality materials, such as seasoned spruce and maple, and he paid great attention to detail. Each violin was handcrafted with care, and no two instruments were exactly alike.

The Masetti Sound

Masetti's violins are known for their powerful, yet sweet and mellow sound. They are characterized by a rich low end and a clear, singing high end. Masetti's instruments are highly sought after by musicians who appreciate their exceptional sound quality.

Legacy

Masetti died in Milan, Italy, in 1829. He left behind a legacy of exquisite violins that are still played and treasured by musicians today. His instruments continue to inspire and delight, and they are a testament to his exceptional craftsmanship.
