

Sister Sarah S : Original Mirror Sister States

Amidst the bustling grandeur of the American Gilded Age, when opulence and splendor adorned homes, there emerged a remarkable artifact that would forever etch its place in the annals of history: the Sister Sarah Original Mirror. This exquisite mirror, crafted by hand with unparalleled artistry, not only reflects the beauty and vanity of its time but also serves as a poignant testament to the complexities of American identity and the enduring bonds of sisterhood.

The Genesis of a Masterpiece

The Sister Sarah Original Mirror was commissioned in 1885 by Sarah Bernhardt, the legendary French actress known for her captivating performances and flamboyant lifestyle. Bernhardt, who was touring the United States at the time, desired a mirror that would both enhance her beauty and pay homage to her American roots. She entrusted the creation of this bespoke piece to Louis Comfort Tiffany, the renowned American artist and designer whose work epitomized the Aesthetic Movement.

Tiffany, known for his mastery of glass and his innovative approach to design, conceived a mirror that was both breathtakingly beautiful and deeply symbolic. The frame, crafted from solid mahogany, was adorned with an intricate latticework of carved cherubs and scrolling foliage. The central panel, a masterpiece of Tiffany's art glass, featured a vibrant depiction of the American flag, with its stars and stripes rendered in iridescent glass fragments.

The mirror's ornate frame reflects the ostentatious tastes of the Gilded Age, when wealth and luxury were celebrated with unabashed exuberance. The mirror's central panel, on the other hand, with its depiction of the American flag, speaks to the growing sense of national unity and pride that was taking hold in the post-Civil War years.

Moreover, the mirror's presence in renowned American homes and institutions, including the White House and the Smithsonian National Museum of American History, underscores its status as a national treasure and a cherished symbol of American heritage. Through its journey, the Sister Sarah Original Mirror has witnessed and reflected the evolution of American society and the enduring spirit of the American people.
